The People that Could Have Been

JOSH Welcome. I'm Joshua Slocum, and this is Disaffected, the show that looks at politics, culture, and relationships through a psychological lens. Tonight we'll tackle the absurd narcissism of an ugly woman named Michelle Obama, the political cuckoldry of Pope Leo, and more seriously, letting go of the forlorn hope that we can change our character-disordered loved ones. But first, the posthumous degradation of Charlie Kirk continues.

THE POSTHUMOUS TRIAL OF CHARLIE KIRK

From a Wikipedia summary:

Most people saw the Cadaver Synod as the obscenity it was, but others took it as an inspiration example centuries later. The English Civil War of the 17th century saw King Charles deposed and beheaded, replaced by commoner Oliver Cromwell who rose to Lord Protector during the country's short Republican period.

Oliver Cromwell did not remain popular, though, and after he died in 1658 the aristocracy did a Cadaver Synod reboot. Royalists pried Cromwell's moldering corpse out of its Westminster Abbey crypt and carted it through the streets of London for all and sundry to spit on and jeer. What was once Oliver Cromwell was then put in shackles and left to hang on display until the afternoon when he was cut down and decapitated in front of the crowd.

The past few months have been an orgy of sadistic delight in Charlie's murder. You can't have missed it; it's everywhere. Putatively normal Americans, heavily weighted toward white women, took to social media to mock his murder, to praise alleged shooter Tyler Robinson, and to have emotional and perhaps literal orgasms on camera as they gavotte in erotic pleasure on camera reliving his murder in their minds.

This is a tiny snippet of tens of thousands of these after Kirk's murder.

I may not agree with him on a lot of things.

Couric is having none of it. The immoral and the morally insane will not stand for an example of human decency to go unchallenged. Listen to her disgusting use of "some people feel" to cloak her sadism. She will not let him make one point about decency without retuning to "some people feel he was extreme."

He deserved it, didn't he Katie? Maybe you should take a barbed pike and steal into the cemetery at night to shove it up his dead ass just to show him what pig men like him get? Sadistic demon.

I've got to give John Fetterman some more credit. He's the only Democrat I've noticed who gives even a clue that he's a human with a moral heart. CNN is trying to drag him down to their level, too, but he won't have it.

Here's Fetterman on the air with the wretched Dana Bash.

SEGMENT

It's just as I predicted when the cardinals elevated Chicago's Robert Francis Prevost to the status of Pope Leo. Just as I predicted despite naive Catholics telling me it wouldn't be this bad, Pope Leo is exactly the Communist subversive all sensible people with eyes knew he was.

Recall a few weeks ago we showed him attending a billionaire's eco save the earth conference. In his timid, mousy femi-voice he stood in his robes blessing a block ice which he insisted on calling waaa-ter.

He soon took aim at President Trump and the entire administration, accusing them of being "inhumane" for deporting illegal aliens. Robert Francis Prevost really does believe the United States is the world's orphanage mommy. He doesn't think we're allowed to say no to anyone who wants to jump our borders. When someone does, he calls us "inhumane" for saying, get out of my house and stop sucking up taxpayer dollars.

To the Participants in the 115th Annual Meeting of the Catholic Charities USA Network

I was pleased to learn of the 115th Annual Meeting of the Catholic Charities USA Network taking place in San Juan, Puerto Rico, and I offer cordial greetings and good wishes to all those participating.

You are gathered together as the Church celebrates the Jubilee Year focused on the virtue of hope, which my venerable predecessor defined as "the desire and expectation of good things to come, despite our not knowing what the future may bring" (Bull of Indiction of the Ordinary Jubilee of the Year 2025, 1).

Through your 168 diocesan Catholic Charities agencies, you become "agents of hope" for the millions of people who approach the Church in the United States of America seeking compassion and care. Many of those whom you serve are among the most vulnerable, including migrants and refugees.

As they are not able to rely on their own resources and have to depend on God and the goodness of others, in many ways your ministry makes the Lord's providence concrete for them. Through providing food, shelter, medical care, legal assistance, and many other gestures of kindness, Catholic Charities affiliates across the United States show what Pope Francis often referred to as God's "style" of closeness, compassion, and tenderness.

While those affected by poverty and forced migration face difficult challenges, let us not forget that they can also be witnesses to hope not only through their trust in divine assistance, but also by their resilience in often

Let's leave off with border czar and Catholic Tom Homan's response. The audio is a little hard to hear, we know.
